1. INTRODUCTION

The purpose of this Request for Proposal is to solicit submissions from qualified firms to develop a numerical water budget model for French Creek Water Region to predict and simulate scenarios of increased water demand, climate change and land cover change to better quantify and understand water availability and constraints within the aquifers and surface waterbodies in this part of the RDN.

We require hydrogeological services to compile existing data and perform primary data collection as required to select, build, and calibrate a 3D numerical groundwater flow model (or integrated models). The model is to be used as a tool to assess stress on aquifers and watersheds by comparing water availability with water use and setting boundary conditions for sustainable water extraction in various scenarios. The consultants will report out on findings of this technical analysis, and provide recommendations for water supply planning, land use decisions, and water objectives.

The desired work start date would be in late September / October 2021 and the project should be complete by December 2022.

2. BACKGROUND

Natural variability in water supply and quality, climate change impacts, and growth pressures in the French Creek Water Region generate a need to better understand and estimate the water availability and dynamics in the area. This is important context to inform where additional water storage infrastructure, natural asset preservation and demand management may be required to improve water resilience.

Observations and projections of climate change indicate that we can expect warmer winter weather resulting in compromised upper elevation snowpack, more extreme rain events, and decreased summer precipitation and higher summer temperatures causing longer drought periods. As the population grows and the climate changes, water conservation and protection of natural watershed assets that contribute to maintain the water balance (soils, wetlands, riparian areas, forests) will be a priority to ensure there is sufficient water to meet community needs and maintain healthy ecosystems. There is a need to meet the demand for growth in this area with a sustainable water supply, and to do that we must better understand the water availability and constraints in the aquifers and surface waterbodies in this part of the RDN. This is not based on far-off speculation; it is based on current reality.

As land managers and water managers, we must balance competing water needs and land practices with finite water supplies, both surface water and groundwater. A refined numerical water budget model that can predict and simulate scenarios of increased water demand, climate change and land cover change will assist with managing this essential resource in a complex environment.

The proposed spatial scale for this project includes the area within the French Creek Water Region which comprises:

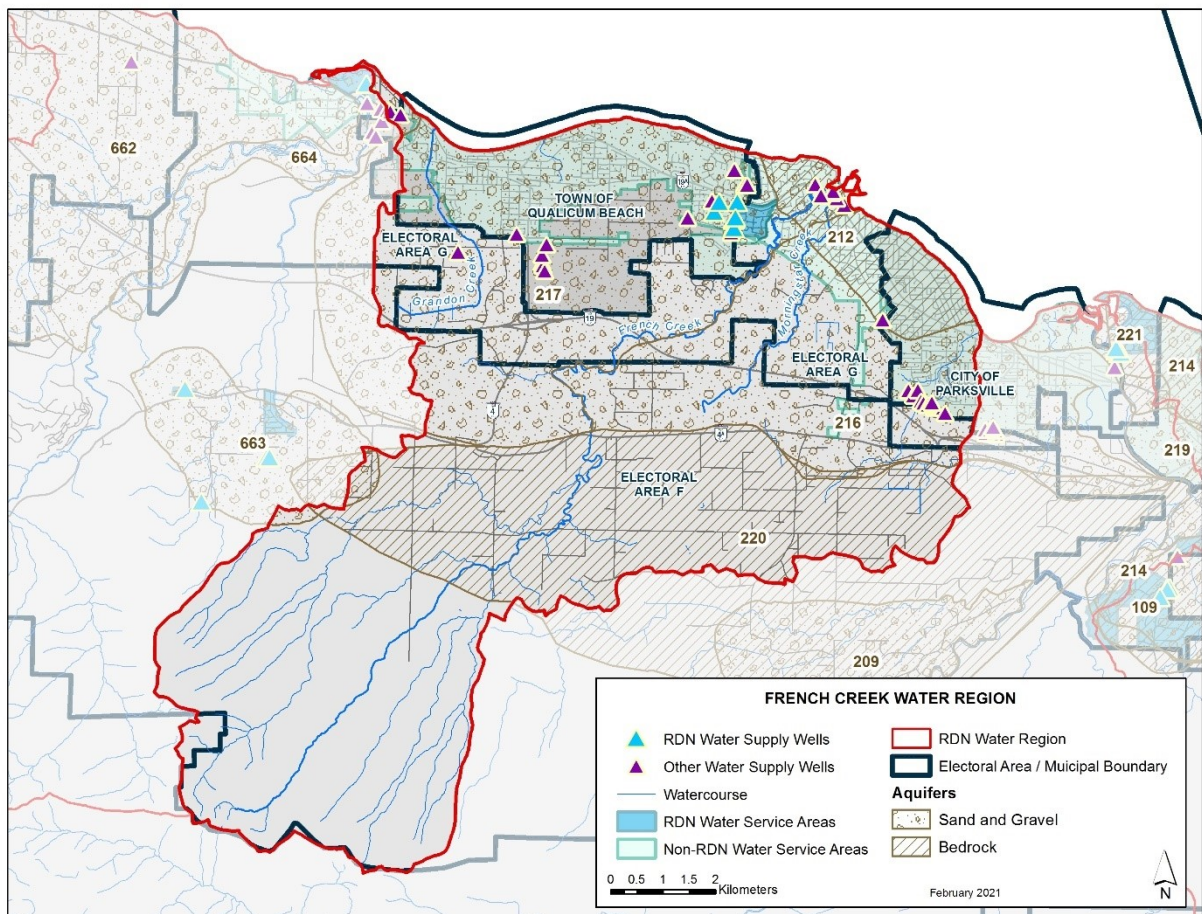

- The extent of the mapped aquifers that intersect French Creek Water Region

- Aquifers 212, 216, 217, 220, 663 (and any new mapped aquifers based on recent Provincial refinements)
- The watercourses contained in French Creek Water Region
 - French Creek, Morningstar Creek, Grandon Creek, Beach Creek, Romney Creek, Carey Creek, Hamilton Marsh etc.

The study area overlaps four local government jurisdictions: RDN Electoral Areas F and G, Town of Qualicum Beach and City of Parksville. It includes the RDN French Creek Water Service Area and also covers the service area of the private water utility EPCOR French Creek, among other smaller privately operated water systems.

The figure below presents the proposed area of interest. The study area is meant to be defined by hydrology/hydrogeology, not jurisdiction, and can be further defined during the project scoping stage based on closer review of updated aquifer mapping and inclusion of areas of interest to partners.

It is respectfully recognized that this area is within Coast Salish traditional territory of the K'omoks, Qualicum, Snaw-naw-as, and Snuneymuxw First Nations.

Water Budget 'Phases'

The RDN Drinking Water and Watershed Protection program completed a regional water budget analysis for both the Vancouver Island and Gulf Island portion of the region in 2013. This “Phase 1” work included all available data into a conceptual model of water supply and demand for the aquifers and surface watercourses in the region. A relative stress ranking highlighted priority areas to advance the next phases of the water budget study.

Phase 2 rolled out between 2014 -2016 in the three priority areas that were identified in the first phase: Nanoose, French Creek, and Cedar-Yellowpoint. The focus of Phase 2 was on expanded data collection and monitoring, to fill gaps identified in the initial datasets used for the analysis. It included the instrumentation of additional volunteer observation wells, a new hydrometric station, and low flow monitoring. This was a key step in preparation for “Phase 3”, which is building a numerical model for surface and groundwater, to run scenarios to illustrate and quantify the potential impacts climate change projections, land use and development changes, and increased extraction, as a necessary tool for developing long term water supply strategies for those priority areas.

A Phase 3 numerical water budget model was completed in 2020 for Nanoose (Electoral Area E), as the first priority area. Next, in 2021-2022, the RDN is looking to advance the development of a Phase 3 water budget model for French Creek Water Region. It has been identified in previous studies and by ongoing monitoring that the surface water flows and the groundwater levels in portions of this water region are under stress. This reveals the need for a future-looking analysis that provides the technical basis for a long-term strategy for water supply, from both the community and ecological perspective.

3. SCOPE OF SERVICES FOR THIS PROJECT

- Compile existing data and perform primary data collection as required to build and calibrate a 3D numerical groundwater flow model (or integrated models).
- Select a model best fit for modelling the local conditions inclusive of surficial and bedrock aquifers and interaction with surface water flows. (Proposals should provide a rationale on model selection).
- Include a sensitivity analysis of the model using ranges of uncertainty and assumed values of parameters applied to the model.
- Apply the numerical model to assess, evaluate and predict: water quantities, water movement in the hydrologic cycle, influential landscape characteristics, environmental flow needs (as per provincial EFN policy), and how human activities modify the hydrologic cycle.
- Use the numerical model to develop a water budget to better understand current groundwater and surface water inputs and outputs, looking at current water use, as well as setting boundary conditions for sustainable extraction in various scenarios such as: climate change (droughts), pumping (increased demand), and land cover change. (Proposals can suggest relevant scenarios / combination of scenarios that would meet the project objectives).

- Assess “stress” on aquifers and watersheds by comparing water availability with water use.
- Report out on findings and provide recommendations for water supply planning, land use decisions and water objectives.
- Identify data gaps and additional areas of study so we can update / calibrate the model on an ongoing basis as more data and information becomes available.
- Include meaningful collaboration with First Nations on this project, based on mutual interest.

Due to potential budget constraints, it may be necessary to deliver this project in predefined stages. Proposals should include some discussion of how the work could be tasked out into discrete stages that build upon each other to complete the full scope.

4. DELIVERABLES AND OUTCOMES

Deliverables:

- ✓ Calibrated numerical model with all data files. Ideally would include a visualization dashboard for ongoing use by planners and water managers.
- ✓ Output files from multiple model runs / scenarios – includes GIS layers (i.e. recharge areas)
- ✓ Final report documenting methodology, model sensitivity, interpretation of results and recommendations for RDN and partners.
- ✓ Presentation to RDN committee / Board.

Outcomes:

Quantify water availability

Develop a numerical model that represents the integrated hydrologic system in French Creek Water Region and characterize groundwater and surface water dynamics at the watershed, aquifer and site scale in terms of baseflow, groundwater levels and recharge; outputs and inputs.

(Consultants will propose how this will be quantified and calibrated based on available monitoring data.

Understand boundary conditions

Run scenarios, including climate change, pumping (water use), land cover change to better quantify and define sustainable groundwater extraction levels.

Quantify how much water is available for community needs (water system, domestic wells, agriculture, etc.) without causing harm to in-stream flow needs (aquatic life, recreation), while protecting existing water users and recognizing Indigenous water rights; spatially understand groundwater recharge across the area.

Provide decision support

Provide the technical foundation for strategic decisions on regional water supply / water servicing; guide adaptive regional water supply management and water system operation; evaluate the cumulative effects of land and water uses within watersheds.

Identify areas for heightened protections based on groundwater recharge potential.

Inform targets for water conservation (community) as well as water allocation targets and water objectives (Province); help make informed decisions about the design of environmental monitoring programs.

Provide a watershed scale context for site-scale assessments (proof of water).

Note: Option to include water quality modelling is thus far considered a subsequent scope that could be added to the numerical model built initially with a focus on water quantity. This could be included as part of the proposal, if consultants deem necessary and costed out for reference.
